

Supreme Court

- I believe that any potential nominees' backgrounds should reflect a broad concern for the human rights tradition that has made our country great. Although I regret attempts by recent administrations to restrict these rights, I don't believe amendments are the route to address my concerns.
- I do not favor any constitutional amendments. The constitution is fine, and any interpretations that may suggest policies that differ from my positions are temporal in nature; given time, they may change. I don't think the constitution should be morphed for narrow concerns that are already addressed in it more broadly.
